IRG Regains Independent Status and Local Ownership

Mill Creek, WA: July 1, 2019 - IRG Physical & Hand Therapy has announced that the company is again independently owned and operated. Over the last eight years IRG partnered with a national physical therapy organization and recently decided it is time to get back to their roots. IRG is now fully independent again, with local decision making and local operation, headquartered in Mill Creek.

Lead by M. Shannon O’Kelley, MPT, IRG has over 30 outpatient Physical and Hand Therapy clinics throughout the Puget Sound region. O’Kelley opened the first IRG clinic in 1996 and has expanded the locations and services to fit the growing needs of the local communities.

As healthcare continues to get more consolidated, IRG is innovating and branching out. Local independence allows IRG to focus on the details and small things that are important to continue providing the best care to patients and their physicians.

“As healthcare continues to get more complex, it’s more important than ever to focus on the small stuff—listening with empathy and compassion; being fully present for our patients; taking time for mindfulness and self-care; going above and beyond in every opportunity. This allows us to provide the best care to our communities,” said Shannon O’Kelley, IRG Founder and President.

IRG Physical & Hand Therapy is headquartered in Mill Creek, WA and operates over 30 outpatient orthopedic rehabilitation clinics throughout the Puget Sound Region. For more information, please visit IRGPT.COM.
